Leading Hybrid Teams

Lead with confidence, no matter the distance.

How do you manage a team you can't always see?

Remote and hybrid working used to be viewed with suspicion. Now it's simply how most teams operate, at least some of the time. But that shift raises real questions leaders are still working out: what do "office hours" mean when everyone's schedule looks different? Is high-value work even possible when you're rarely in the same room? What role does tech actually play in making hybrid work, rather than just enabling it?

Delivered by one of our expert consultants, all of whom work remotely themselves, this three-hour interactive workshop covers both the strategic thinking and the practical tools you need to lead a productive, agile, happy and well-informed hybrid team.

What you’ll do

You’ll start with the four modes of hybrid working, understanding when to lean into deep focus, collaboration, admin or social connection, and how to help your team recognize which mode they’re in. From there, you’ll dig into what actually builds trust in a hybrid team: shifting from managing time and visibility to managing outcomes.

You’ll also cover the practical mechanics that get overlooked when everyone’s suddenly hybrid: recruiting and onboarding people who may never set foot in an office, optimizing meetings so remote contributions carry equal weight, and sharing knowledge across a team that isn't always in the same room. You'll leave with strategic perspective and practical tools you can put into action immediately, not just a better feeling about hybrid working in the abstract.

What happens when hybrid leadership works

When leaders manage outcomes instead of presence, everything changes:

- Trust builds through results, not through who's visibly online the longest
- Meetings work equally well for remote and in-person contributors, not just whoever's in the room
- New hires onboard smoothly, even if they've never met the team in person
- "Always on" culture eases, because outcomes matter more than hours logged
- Teams stay connected and informed, regardless of where or when they're working

University of Essex

"Reassured I'm leading a strong team based on trust, and to continue with a leadership style which empowers my team." Nicola Riley

Benefits & Results

The most immediate benefit is a mindset shift: leaders stop trying to replicate in-person management from a distance and start managing for outcomes instead. But the deeper shift is trust. Once a team is led on results rather than visibility, hybrid stops feeling like a compromise and starts feeling like it's actually working.

What your organization gets

Managers who lead hybrid teams with clarity and confidence, less proximity bias, fairer performance management, and a culture that holds together even when the team rarely shares a room.

Birmingham Uni

"Good pace and good discussions. I've learnt ways to build trust and check in with my team."

Why it matters

Most leaders were trained to manage what they can see, and hybrid working has quietly pulled that ground out from under them.

- Without visible presence to rely on, leaders aren't sure how to tell if the work is actually getting done
- Onboarding, knowledge sharing and meetings still often run on in-person assumptions that don't translate to hybrid
- Left unaddressed, "always on" culture creeps in, eroding focus time and increasing burnout risk

"Relaxed, sharing of views. Friendly informal feel but with lots of very human observations which got me thinking, particularly around the culture of an organization and how to develop/sustain that remotely."
